Investing in the Delta: Public Infrastructure

Ensuring a Safe and Connected Delta Region

Communities throughout the country compete to provide a high-level quality of life for their residents, and the Delta is no different. As these communities look to attract new families and business investments and retain their current populations, they are faced with the challenge of renewing the public infrastructure systems that we rely so heavily upon for our health, safety, and connection to other communities.

Investing in these public infrastructure systems requires dedicated partnerships between local, state, and federal entities with both public and private support. Furthermore, a strong public infrastructure can secure major businesses investments, ensuring these manufacturing and research facilities adequate services for their operations and their employees.

Modern water and wastewater systems ensure a safe environment for Delta residents. Telecommunications and broadband infrastructure allow our communities and local businesses to connect to the outside world, market our culturally rich heritage and innovative ideas, and train our youth for future opportunities. Each of these systems further requires the planning, mapping, and management to maintain strong infrastructure.

The Delta Regional Authority recognizes the need for safe, reliable, and modern public infrastructure to make the Delta region a great place to live, work, and play. Through the States' Economic Development Assistance Program, the DRA prioritizes investments in the construction, rehabilitation, and expansion of water and wastewater systems, broadband infrastructure, and levees as well as the management and planning services that these systems demand to support safe and connected communities.

DRA's investments in public infrastructure throughout the Delta provides economic development, jobs, and commerce to the Region's communities, families, and businesses.
